Making the most of the job search at home

Welcome to day 40-something of coronavirus quarantine. At the moment, the IT job market appears to be holding its own-though jobs are scarcer, the hiring process is slower, and it could all change tomorrow.

The good news is there seems to be light at the end of the tunnel. While things aren't perfect, virus curves have started to flatten and there's serious discussion taking place about how to reopen the economy.

So, whether you're working from home or looking-for-work from home, now may be a timely opportunity to brush up your job hunting technique, your resume and your interview skills.

Watch my LinkedIn feed in the future for a round-up of my favorite interview tips.

At right, I've included articles related to our challenges at hand from an IT perspective. Keep in mind details may become outdated as news continues to evolve.

In the meantime, if I can help, let me know...and hang in there!
